I Fourteen engines, balf as many trucks and the fireboat Seth Low are detuging the Harbook Stores, Brooklyn, to-day in the almost bopeless effort to stop a fire that broke out by spontaneous combustion in a lot of baled detton on the fourth floor of the fron-

Dound building.

The fire broke out early this morning in No. 3 of the five five-story stone houses known as the Harbeck Stores. These stores lie between Furman street and East River and are 85 feet wide by 170 feet deep each. They form a steetion of the long row of buildings which stretches slong the Brocking river front Form Fullon to Montague street. on post in Furman street, saw smoke issuing from the cracks in the iron sautters over the fourth floor windows.

The policeman sent in an alarm and others followed, the scurth calling fourteen engines to the rescue, for a cotton fire is the most stubborn known to the firemen. It does not spread, nor even blaze up. Chief Nevins, She Demands $50,000 Damages gazing lugubriously at the great clouds of talek black smoke that were still rising from the building at 10 o'clock, said:

Wa chman Carter said this morning that shortly before he discovered the smoon is saving from the fourth, story windows he heard a sound like an expusion, which it is supposed occurred among the jite bales.

The fire was gotten under control at 10 clock, although there was much smouthering fire among the thousands of bales. The firemen had succeeded in preventing the flames from extending to the adjoining stores. Nos 2 and 4, and the fire was practically confined to the fourth and fifth floors of the burning building.

What the loss will be is difficult to determine A great deal of damage will result from water, which drehened the building from the burning building, and the fire many conditions to be bearned, as the contents were exceed by at least fitty different firms. The loss, however, it is thought, is fully covered by insurance.
